For the first time since World War II, global output will drop (-1.7%); per capita income will fall in more than 50 developing countries; net private capital flows will likely turn negative a more than 700 billion drop from the 2007 peak; and trade is expected to decline by 6.1% in 2009 the worst decline in 80 years. In response to this global downturn, a number of governments have passed stimulus packages and other measures that aim to preserve domestic industries and jobs, and sometimes discriminate against foreign producers (e.g. buy local laws). The most recent forecasts announce a re-bounce of trade in 2010 (3.8%) and 2011 (6.9%), primarily driven by developing countries. All three elements (dropping demand on major markets, policy responses to the crisis, and developing countries-led recovery) potentially have significant implications for global production, trade, and value chains. How have lead firms responded Have they changed their traditional supply chain strategy and relocated and/or outsourced part of their production How will those changes affect developing countries What should be the policy responses to these changes How to best prepare developing countries for recovery and integration in the new global production chains This item ships from multiple locations.
